Rosa Ojwang – Advocate & Public Interest Researcher

Rosa Ojwang is a dynamic advocate and legal researcher dedicated to strengthening accountability and advancing rights across East Africa. Trained in law at the University of Nairobi, admitted to the Bar in 2020, and currently completing her LL.M. in Regional Integration and East African Community Law at the University of Dar es Salaam, Rosa brings both rigorous scholarship and practical legal experience to her work.

She has built a track record of research and advocacy with leading regional institutions, including Rights Bridge Africa, Katiba Institute, and the Centre for Strategic Litigation. In these roles, she has delivered high-quality legal and policy analysis, supported public interest litigation, and contributed to regional projects addressing constitutional accountability, disability justice, gender inclusion, and governance reform. Her ability to translate complex jurisprudence and policy frameworks into accessible strategies has been central to advancing litigation, advocacy, and knowledge development across the justice sector.

Rosa's writing has appeared in both academic and public forums, from her master's thesis on trade integration in East Africa to newspaper articles on disability rights.

Beyond technical expertise, Rosa brings a values-driven commitment to justice. Whether developing evidence for court cases, producing policy briefs, or engaging directly with communities, she approaches each task with precision, empathy, and a clear focus on systemic change. With her grounding in public interest litigation, regional integration, and rights-based approaches, Rosa represents a new generation of lawyers determined to make Kenya's justice system more accountable, inclusive, and people-centered.
